SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for January 15. Christ's First Miracle. John ii:1-11. By J. E. Gilbert, D. D., LL. D., Secre-tary of American Society of Religious Education.

INTRODUCTION. In the last lesson we learned that as Jesus was about to depart from the region of the Jordan and enter Galliee He gained a new disciple, named Nathanael, through the influence of Phil-ip (John 1:43-45). This man exhibited ex-cellent qualities. He was less credulous than the four who had previously accepted Christ, evidently determined to accept nothing for the truth without the highest evidence. But his worth was recognized at sight by Jesus, who openly commended him and in return received a noble confession (John 1:49). Entering thus into the sight by Jesus, who openly commended him and in return received a noble confession (John 1:49). Entering thus into the fullest confidence Nathanael (afterward called Bartholomew) had the high honor of giving some direction to the proposed journey of his new Master. The record is entirely silent concerning the route taken and the events by the way. With great abruptness it locates Jesus with His followers in Cana, Nathanael's home town (John xxi:2), fully eighty miles from the scenes of John's ministry.

GUESTS INVITED. Soon after the arrival, so soon after that nothing is mentioned before it, a marriage occurred in the village. The history omits all mention of the contracting parties, but calls special attention to the invited guests (verses 1 and 2). Mary, the mother of Jesus, was there, having come from Nazareth, a distance of nine miles. Her presence suggests that she must have been a close friend, if not a relative. And her Son, so recently inducted by haptism into the prophetic office, was also called, and with Him the five disciples—John, Andrew, Peter, Philip and Nathanael, the latter only being a fellow townsman. A notable company was this—the entire Christian ministry, nearly one-half of the prospective college of apostles, the Savior of the world, the most honored of women, all gathered at a wedding, and this at the opening of the Gailleean ministry. What does it all mean? What a strange beginning of a great enterprise! Who could expect any advantage for this infant cause?

AID SOUGHT. There is no evidence of any special design in the invitation of Jesus to this marriage. He appears to have assumed the place of an ordinary guest. But an unforessen circumstance gave color to the occasion and brought Him into prominence. The wine gave out (v. 2) and Mary went to Him with a statement of the fact. It is not probable that she fully understood His power, for He had never displayed it, and yet it is evident that the ematter was nothing to either of them, that they were not express this nicely, but that was a the event. And Jesus is thus suddenly changed from the place of a mere guest, rejoicing with other guests, to be the custodian of authority.

VESSELS SUPPLIED. Nothing could be more appropriate than Mary's last words. They left Jesus free to act, or not to act, according to His wisdom, but supplied Him with necessary help, so that His doings might be witnessed and attested, Indeed the very best conditions were provided for a free and important deed, such as was actually performed. To facilitate matters still more there were standing near at the time six stone waterpots. Their size cannot be determined although the text says each contained two or three firkins (verse 6), but the measure is uncertain and unimportant. These vessels were a customary part of the furniture for feast occasions, being used for purifying or washing purposes. The Jews, and especially the Pharisees, were careful to perform frequent ablutions while eating (Mark, vii:3), to avoid defilement, a custom handed down by tradition (Luke, xi:29). So here stood ready for use by the Savior vessels which might serve His purpose should He conclude to act.

ORDERS GIVEN. The details are omitted from our narrative, Great turning points in the story only are sketched. How long a time elapsed after Mary's words to the servants, what Jesus did and said, what the servants did, how the guests behaved, we are not informed. After a little there was a change in the thought of the Master. He had said that He was under no obligation, and that His ministerial prerogative did not require anything of Him, but in a short time He was moved by a far different purpose. "Fill the waterpots," He said, and the servants filled them to the brim (verse 3), was His next order. And He was obeyed. His hand touched nothing. His word touched everything (Isa, Iviil). There may have been some surprise expressed on the countensances of those who were near. Does this Master propose to give cold water instead of wine? Has there been temperance advocates present they would have rejoiced or wine? Has there been temperance advocates present they would have rejoiced and they would have thought there was an intended rebuke upon the social customs of the time.

SURPRISE SHOWN. Somewhere between the well where the water was drawn and the governor's lips—in the buckets of the servants, in the stone waterpots or in the silver goblets—that water became wine. A miracle had been wrought, and Jesus was the worker (John Iv:46). There could have been no deception, for there was no collusion. But was it really wine? An incident settled that point. The governor, whose duty it was to receive all articles first and then to pass them to other guests, who was chosen as an expert so that all might be in proper form and suitable to the occasion—this governor was entirely ignorant of what had transpired. He did not know that the wine had failed, nor that water had been provided. The servants only knew the last point (verse 8). But when the governor tasted this wine he was greatly surprised at its quality. Contrary to custom, it was served last, though really best, and he called the bridegroom and congratulated him both upon the excellent beverage and the good taste that had violated established usage (verse 19). Then it was wine and no counterfeit.

GLORY DISPLAYED, What followed at that wedding no one knows—no one cares to know. The end has been reached for which the marrative was introduced into the Gospel story. It was not the marriage but the miracle that concerned the inspired writer. The center figure was not the bride, or bridegroom, or Mary, but Jesus. Here in Cana He wrought His first miracle to supplement the provisions for a welding feast. The great fact is that here the manifested His glory (verse 11). He possessed it before, even from eternity (John xvii.5), but it was concealed under the drapery of His flesh, Hitherto, through infancy, youth and early manhood the Divine nature had scarcely been known. Some had indeed believed it as a deduction from certain facts that had come to them (John it 49). But interesting attempts to find attractive and instructive features in this narrative. It has been used to show that Jesus was no gloomy ascetic, out of sympathy with men, retiring from the ordinary and festive scenes of everyday life. It has been invoked to prove that His social standing and the social standing of His family was not among the extremely poor, as some have supposed. It has been microscopically examined to maintain various fancies and vagaries, having no value whatever, except to amuse their inventors. It is chiefly valuable as indicating the manner of beginning the gospel ministry. Jesus was not destentatious, but humble. He made no loud professions or ambitious claims. With a selected few He entered quietly into a small community and there accepted courtesy as any man might do. An occasion having arisen, quite out of the ordinary of ministerial function, He gently used His power, at the time hesitating on the score of propriety. But in so doing He became known. That method won His disciples. The truly great need no great event to show their greatness, Jesus would shine anywhere (John 1:4). The light always chines.

was all their meaning, and it was entirely respectful and decidedly Oriental (I. Sam. xvi:19). He also said that His time for ministerial service had not yet come, a second objection to her request, and an additional reason for the other statement. He did not, in other words, consider this a duty to the host or an opportunity for His ministry.

SERVANTS INSTRUCTED. The mother said no more to her son. There was no need to multiply words. She had gone to urge a service. He had refused the duty and the opportunity. How many mothers in jure a good cause by pleasing even to annoyance! It is vastly better to leave the naked statement of facts to make their own impression. She doubtless felt that, notwithstanding the answer, somethings would be done, for she immediately gave instructions to the servants. It is a great son whose mother so confides in him that she told the servents were will considered the following hard turned this whole question of the wine over to Jesus, and left Him to do what He pleased (v. 5), with only this additional part that she told the servants to obey Him. MISS ANTHONY ON MALE AIRS. The Veteran Suffragist Sees Signs of Masculine Aristocracy in Our faces of all women in political leagues," said Susan B. Anthony, yesterday, as she rose to reply to the welcome of the Society for Political Study, at its annual reception in the Tuxedo, Madison avenue and Fiftyninth street, "but very few I see here are famillar." familiar." The veteran suffragist was a quaint figure in her plain black gown, with a red shawl knotted over the shoulders and gray head uncovered. She had removed the small black bonnet just before rising, and was talking quite in confidential wise. "In the government of our new posses-sions," she said, "I see indications that men of this nation propose to establish a male aristocracy. In Hawaii they give the male intelligence supremacy in government.

This will be followed in Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines. Even the most advanced men whom we have relied upon have decided to found the government on the same barbaric principles. You women have decided to found the government on the same barbaric principles. You women ought to raise your voices—a petition should be sent to congress to protest against t. It is hard enough now to persuade men here. It will be vastly harder to persuade the barbaric men in these islands of the sea once this is established. Endeavor to ward off the degradation, humiliation and injustice sure to follow such a state."

Great applause greeted this exhortation. Mrs. H. H. Knowles rushed to the platform with a bunch of pinks "in the name of the club." When comparative calmness reigned once more Miss Anthony went on:
"I want every woman of wealth to bereigned once more Miss Anthony went on:

"I want every woman of wealth to bequeath her money to a standing fund for the enfranchisement of women. When all women are enfranchised what will become of the money? you ask. Mrs. Richardson, here at my right, president of the Washington Memorial Association, stands for the establishment of a great national university. If this blossoms out into perfect equality for men and women as students and professors, this money shall go to support a professorship. But, mark you, Mrs. Richardson," shaking an emphatic finger, "if it does not give women equal chances there won't any of it go there."

ALL ABOUT A STOVE. Doctor Crosky and a Man Named Dunn Come to Blows in Deardorff Building. The second floor of the Deardorff building was the scene of an encounter yester-day afternoon between a heavyweight and day afternoon between a heavyweight and a welterweight—and it was all about the balance on a stove. Dr. Henry Crosky bought a stove and paid only a portion of the bill and a young man named Dunn, who represented the stove man, called for the balance, which the doctor refused to pay until the stove was put in proper share, claiming there was something, the pay until the stove was put in proper shape, claiming there was something the matter with it. A few compliments were exchanged and when Dunn intimated that the doctor did not intend to pay, the services of a referee were in demand, but as no one was near to act in that capacity, the Marquis of Queensbury rules were waived, as were also the seconds, bottle-holders and timekeepers. The doctor weighs about 220, while Dunn tips the scale at about 140.
